Team caliber diecast value

Team caliber diecast. Diecast car values.

Today's NASCAR diecast collectors value their collection because buying collectible NASCAR diecast requires a significant investment. Gone are the days when you could buy one for $19; now, a new 1:24 diecast from Lionel costs $55 for the base ARC model or over $100 for the RCCA Elite model. To answer the question of what your collection is worth, use Diecast Registry's online price guide. Simply add your diecasts to your garage and see their current market value, as well as the overall value of your collection. The most valuable NASCAR diecast is the Dale Earnhardt Sr. #3 Brooks & Dunn 1998 Chevy Monte Carlo 1:24 Action RCCA Elite Prototype. Only six prototypes exist, making it the rarest and most valuable diecast at a book value of around $4,500. The most valuable regular-production diecast is the Dale Earnhardt Sr. #3 Daytona 500 Winner 1998 Chevy Monte Carlo 1:24 Action RCCA Elite Gold, with only 100 examples existing and a book value of about $2,500. The rest of the list consists of regular production diecasts, including the Jimmie Johnson Lowe's 250th Start 2003 Chevy Monte Carlo 1:24 Action ARC Color Chrome. This diecast commemorates Jimmie Johnson's 250th NASCAR Cup Series start and has a unique paint scheme that previews his 2009 Lowe's paint scheme. A special diecast was released to honor Johnson's 250th start, featuring a decal on the decklid. It sold out quickly at Charlotte Motor Speedway, with none available by race day, and its value is approximately $2,500. The rarest Team Caliber diecast is Mark Martin #6 Valvoline from 1999, with only 24 units made for a charity event. Its book value is around $2,100. Another highly valuable diecast is the Dale Earnhardt Sr #3 Bass Pro Chevy Monte Carlo, one of 100 gold elites given away in a sweepstakes promotion. This rare diecast has a value of about $1,800. The most valuable non-stock-car diecast is an RCR engine from 2001, autographed by Richard Childress and Dale Earnhardt Sr. It's worth around $1,500 retail and $600 wholesale. Among Jeff Gordon's diecasts, the most valuable one is his 2010 stars & stripes paint scheme honoring American soldiers. This diecast has a book value of approximately $1,500 and can be sold for about $700 wholesale. Currently, the most expensive Dale Earnhardt Jr diecast is from 2010, with only 33 units produced, making it highly sought after and valuable, with a retail value of around $1,000. Most Valuable NASCAR Diecasts Some of the most valuable NASCAR diecasts include: * Dale Earnhardt Jr, with a value of around $1,300. * Jeff Gordon's #40 Stanton Challenger, worth about $1,000. * Kyle Busch's Bristol Sweep 2010 1:24 Action ARC Set, valued at approximately $500. Other notable mentions include Richard Petty's STP 1974 Dodge Charger and Kevin Harvick's 2010 #2 Tide Pods Truck. The total price of around $625, with a lower wholesale cost of $475.
